can gather in the games against the Reds. The regular outfield, consisting of Shanks, Milan and Moeller, will be in harness, while Gandil, Morgan and Foster of the regular infield will be in their positions, with Wally Smith at short. Acosta will be taken for utility purposes. Johnson, Boehling, Engel and Shaw will be the pitchers, while Henry and Ainsmith will look after the catching depart-the players will put forth their best efforts.

For an hour this morning, Griffith was closeted with the players who are to take the trip. The signal code was gone over, and a discussion was had with reference to the system of play to be in vogue for the National Leaguers.

Herman Schaefer will be in cha ge of the Yanigans, who are to play the Newark team tomorrow. The regulars will play the Vermont Collegians today. Ayres and Bentley will most likely pitch, and tomorrow, if the day is warm, Carl Cashion will in all probability be sent the entire route against the International League champions.

According to Bozeman Bulger of the New York World, who has made a trip around the various training camps, Charley Herzog, the new manager of the Chichmat team, has succeeded in getting his players in better condition this spring than they have ever been before. It is predicted that the Reds will prove a surprise this season, and Herzog is being given credit for having accomplished wonders up to date. A better line on the team will be had after the two games with the Nationals have been played.

Branch Rickey and his school for base ball is just one more new idea introduced by the Browns' manager, says the St. Louis Times. No doubt Branch has the system all worked out how he is going to develop a Cobb. Speaker, Mathewson, Bender and those kind. It's a tough job ahead for Branch, though. Still, if success comes his way, all the credit shall go to him. There are any number of young recruits ready to be 'polished off and placed in the big circle, but they have lacked the education, the early training which Rickey hopes to hand out. The 1914 Browns, just as they are, appear to be an improvement over what was here in the summer of 1913. Rickey put the athletes through his school down south for six weeks, and what real base ball is in them he will bring out on the ball field.

American League magnates.

Wyatt Lee, who pitched the last four immings against the Nationals yesterday, has been one of the leading pitchers in the International League for the past four or five years. Last season he won twenty-two games and lost nine, yet he is never considered by any of the major league clubs when they make their drafts. This is probably because he has been in base ball some time. Harry Harper was considerably handicapped in his pitching by reason of the strong wind which was blowing. It affected his control, and yet he gave a brilliant account of himself. He was bit safely twice, walked two and struck out eight. Harper has learned a lot about holding base runners on first. He is hard to get a lead on, because he has a motion which keeps the base runners guessing. With a little more seasoning the Hackensack youngster ought to be one of Griffith's mainstays this summer.

The Nationals' hitting is still far below what it will be later on. Yesterday, of course, was not a good day to get a line on a ball team, for it was cold and windy and the grounds were soft. But there is sure to be marked improvement by the time the season opens. Neither Morgan nor Gandil is yet hitting up to his standard, but each will get to going in a few days.

Gandil has always been a slow beginner in the spring, but about the time the:

It was by the smallest margin that the Nationals managed to defeat the Newark champions yesterday, the score being 3 to 2 at the finish.

The visitors scored a run in the second on W. Zimmerman's three-bagger and Getz's sacrifice fly, and they tallied again in the sixth on a hit by Callahan and errors by Schaefer and Gandil.

The Nationals got their first tally in the third on hits by Henry, Harper and Moeller. Shanks' triple and a poor throw to third gave them another in the fourth, and the final run came in the fifth, when Schaefer walked, took second on Milan's oct, and scored on Gandil's single. The score:
